

ETEC-674, Graham, Week-4, ADA Assignments:

Use what you learned from the presentation, the information in the text and other sources to answer the following:

1. What are three types of disabilities that students in a course you create might have? Explain the accommodations that you would need to provide for each.

A. Hard of hearing, or deaf;

B. Visually impaired, or blind, or susceptible to optically triggered seizures;

C. Motor-skill impaired, or perhaps partially paralyzed; or disease with tremors; or stroke patients-- relearning motor skills in a different parts of the brain (may have coordination issues). All of these may have difficulty with fine positioning of control/navigation devices, and/or lack strength to activate them in a timely manner, or at all.

2. According to the text, what is the percentage of the population that has a visual, auditory or physical limitation? How does that compare to other sources for this information. (Please list at least one other source you found.)

The text stated 29% (Waterhouse, 2005, p. 172). NIH reports 15-20% have learning disabilities, not mentioned in this question, according to: <http://school.familyeducation.com/intelligence/teaching-methods/38519.html> Also see: <http://disabilitystatistics.org/> where the statistics were as follows: 12.1% of Americans reported some type of disability. So, visual, auditory or physical limitations would seem to be a subset of all disabled people in U.S.A. So, the Waterhouse reported 29% would seem to be very high by comparison--almost 1/3 of the population. On the other hand, disabilitystatistics.org shows the total number of self-reported people with disabilities to be closer to 1/10 of the total population. That is a wide ranging difference. So, I searched another source, the 2010 Census data (again, self-reported), which shows a figure closer to the 12% statistic, at: <http://www.census.gov/prod/2012pubs/p70-131.pdf> . This made me wonder if Waterhouse was listing those who are disabled in education, as opposed to the general population. But when I reviewed her statement, no—she listed only 7.2 % in higher education, while her 29% figure was for the number of families reporting at least one disabled person in their family. I have seen statistics that are higher, such as those used by Waterhouse, but those usually include other groups than those classified as disabled. The other possibility is that those with recognized disabilities are a subset of those individuals with physical limitations. So, that superset would, of course, represent a larger population.

3. Identify three factors other than the actual disabilities that exist in your student population that influence how an institution or a course creator is required to address ADA in an online course.

Other than purely physical disabilities, here are some disorders that may have a neurological origin (also recognized as disabilities by SSD in schools, such as CSUSB) that can degrade learning, and with which teachers must deal:

- A. Dyslexia, where letters in words are perceived to fly off the screen, vibrate, or get jumbled;
- B. ADD, which can be a problem staying focused on a given task, due to easy distraction;
- C. ADHD, where hyperactivity prevents staying put at a computer, to complete online tasks.

As with many types of learning disabilities, different teaching styles can be frequently switched (multiplexed) into play, to approach alternative learning styles and various disorders from different angles—to keep things fresh and grab attention. Also, mixing things up by using short teaching segments can help. Show-and-tell-like, hands-on activities can trigger kinesthetic learning and hold attention, and bypass text and words that may not connect in some students' brains as effectively as with other students.

4. According to the text, what is "assistive technology"? Give some examples.

An assistive technology may include hardware, software, or both, that accommodate a disability, such as screen-readers (text to speech); speech to text converters (speech-recognition converter/transcribers); and Brail printers (allow the blind an opportunity to read about what is on a computer screen, thus converting multimedia subtitles, or text to Brail). The context of the textbook was focused on assistive devices for online webpage navigation, access, and use.

5. Identify and explain two different ways to check a webpage to ensure that it meets the needs of disabled students.

One can either (1) see how the webpage(s) behave--how they appear to disabled people; or (2) get a report that scores the ADA-compliance of the site.

According to Newberry, 2015, in his PowerPoint for the ETEC-674, session-4, on ADA, he presented two automated compliance validating tools that are online. Those links are: (A) HTML Validation via <http://validator.w3.org/> and (B) CSS Validation via <http://jigsaw.w3.org/css-validator/>. Additionally, the textbook mentioned using tools, such as: (C) Vischeck; (D) WebAIM; and (E) Bobby to check the sites. Of these last three, (C) Vischeck is viewer, and (D) WebAIM is a simulator/viewer, while (E) Bobby is a site rating reporter tool.

6. Identify two types of presentations used in online courses (for example, podcasts, PowerPoints, Videos, Slide Shows, etc.) and that you might use and explain how you can ensure that each is ADA compliant. Discuss the relative cost or difficulty of producing the accommodation.

I use PowerPoints and Videos frequently in my courses. In order to ensure ADA compliance, I would need to provide both text descriptions, as well as course content text, at a minimum, since screen readers can translate that text to speech for the blind, and visually impaired students. I could also print slides of the presentation materials, and key-frames from the videos to go with the text, for students who are not blind, but have difficulty seeing an LCD projector screen at a distance. All of these materials, as well as the alternative materials should be available online, for later viewing, under more accommodating circumstances, such as on big-screen monitors, with amplified headsets, with alternative methods for viewing, such as keyboard controls, instead of mouse controls. If a student has more difficulty in class, this material may be more easily viewed and assimilated by later review, which could also reinforce the material, and lessons.

There is computer software applications available for the automated captioning of audio and visual (A/V) materials, but it is usually expensive, time consuming to use (must be operated in real-time), and often makes errors in the text captions that it generates. So, implementation of these computer applications may save some time, but requires that it be checked by a human operator, who can fix the text errors after comparing the resultant captioning to the actual A/V program content. Some of these programs make over 50% errors. On the other hand, human transcriptions take even more time, and will cost more, simply because transcriptionists are usually paid by the hour, but generally make fewer errors, overall. However, each transcriptionist must be jargon in the field of study captured on the A/V materials, or an expert must check, and correct, their work, too. These experts are even more expensive to employ. At my college, captions can be added to video materials, with 6 weeks of advanced notice, along with the original video materials to be captioned. Because of that lead-time, this must be arranged long before the start of any course that will use that material online. So, that scheduling must be included in the design of the course, for all such material transcriptions.

There would be time, material and labor costs associated with each additional task needed in order to achieve reasonable accommodation for disabilities. But, those are simply the costs of doing business, as educators, amid ADA-compliance requirements. The benefit of these additional tasks is that those accommodating materials will be able to be used, over and over again, once created, thus serving many with disabilities in the future [pay-once, use repeatedly]. These cost pressures could also tend to standardize materials for various subjects, and levels of instruction. Because Reusable Learning Objects (RLOs), where such alternative resources have been created, and could be reutilized in order to reduce the costs of converting new, non-standard materials into ADA-complaint materials. In the long-run, this could actually be a positive pressure in favor of ADA compliant RLOs, so that teacher would only need to convert a few original materials, while using the majority of already ADA-compliant RLOs for the bulk of the training. There are repositories of RLOs, I have searched. I will next need to check their ADA-compliance, and suitability, to augment my online training. This could save me a lot of time and trouble, if they are appropriate for the bulk of my courses. We may consider this an “AHA!-

moment” as well as an “ADA-moment.” Please forgive my thinking out-loud, as I sought to answer this question, and then reflect on it.

7. Develop a course usability checklist that is appropriate for your anticipated needs. Use the example provided in the text as a starting point and explain your modifications.

On page 177 of our text, there is figure 8.7, which is the suggested table of Coursesite Usability Checklist items, where Waterhouse suggests the individual checks to be tested for accessibility and other qualities of any site. Below, I have borrowed some items, and modified or added others.

To evaluate a site, mark (select) the “Yes” or “No” answer to each question. Please add comments to the right of any response that might clarify.

Can you easily locate and view announcements?	Yes	No
Can you navigate the site easily?	Yes	No
Is the style of the site pleasing and consistent?	Yes	No
Can you easily get back to the start of each page?	Yes	No
Can you find what you want without trouble?	Yes	No
Is the downloading of files quick?	Yes	No
Is HELP readily available, and actually helpful?	Yes	No
Do videos play quickly, without pauses, throughout?	Yes	No
Do videos have closed-captioning?	Yes	No
Are visuals described in text, including videos?	Yes	No
Is the text easily readable (color, font, size, style)?	Yes	No
Are there accommodations for most disabilities?	Yes	No
Is there an audible feature to read text to you?	Yes	No
Are course supplemental course materials available?	Yes	No
Is there a provision for asking instructor questions?	Yes	No
Is there a student forum available?	Yes	No
Is there a way to submit trouble reports?	Yes	No
Are there any links that are broken (need repair)?	Yes	No
Does this site pass the W3 HTML compliance check?	Yes	No
Does this site pass the W3 CSS compliance check?	Yes	No

Most of the changes in the above table were checks that a site evaluator could use to determine the usability of a site and to spot issues early, before they become problems. But, these could also be used during development of a site, by the programmer(s), before release for Beta Testing, along with many others tests that would be developer-specific.

8. Choose an online course and use your checklist to generate a report on the usability of that course. Your report should include bullet points of things that you recommend be done to improve the usability of specific elements of the course.

The site that I chose was one I have used for my own edification. It is an older site, so some HyperText Markup Language errors might be expected, because it probably predates the validation tool that tests it. It is the MITOpenCourseware site on semiconductor chemistry and physics, as related to the manufacturing and doping of silicon crystals for ultimate use in microelectronic components. It is composed of a lecture series that was recorded in 2003, and later transcribed and digitized for inclusion on the MIT site. The URL of that site is: <http://ocw.mit.edu/courses/electrical-engineering-and-computer-science/6-772-compound-semiconductor-devices-spring-2003/> The lecturer was MIT's Professor, Clifton Fonstad, Jr. In concert with this is a review video by Dr. Sadoway, but video link is missing on the homepage and must be located indirectly. That link goes to one of my favorite videos through youtube.com, at LINK: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=upzI8ZxORYI>

Using my table from question 7, above, I will show the ratings I gave the site on the duplicated table, below, for each attribute (any clarifying comments are on the right):

Can you easily locate and view announcements?		No	Course was recorded in 2003
Can you navigate the site easily?	Yes
Is the style of the site pleasing and consistent?	Yes
Can you easily get back to the start of each page?	Yes
Can you find what you want without trouble?	Yes
Is the downloading of files quick?	Yes
Is HELP readily available, and actually helpful?	Yes		Both FAQs, and online HELP
Do videos play quickly, without pauses, throughout?	Yes		Depends on your own bandwidth
Do videos have closed-captioning?		No
Are visuals described in text, including videos?		No	Poorly where exists; not usually
Is the text easily readable (color, font, size, style)?	Yes
Are there accommodations for most disabilities?		No	Maybe not use on archived class
Is there an audible feature to read text to you?		No	Assumes you have screen reader
Are course supplemental course materials available?	Yes		Lecture notes, assignments, etc.
Is there a provision for asking instructor questions?		No	Archived course, so email only
Is there a student forum available?		No	Archived course, so no need
Is there a way to submit trouble reports?	Yes		Through MITOpenCourseware
Are there any links that are broken (need repair)?		No	All work properly
Does this site pass the W3 HTML compliance check?		No	Has errors and warnings, below
Does this site pass the W3 CSS compliance check?		No	Has errors and warnings, below

It should be noted that this is an archived course from 2003, so there is no live teacher facilitating it. However, for this report, I will treat it as though it is active, and suggest changes to make it more usable in that context.

- Add Announcements section atop course banner, so it is easy to find;

- Add Closed-Captions to videos, for visual learners, and for the deaf/hard of hearing students
- While lecture notes are available, make their presence more prominent on the site
- The review video of MIT's Dr. Sadoway lecture should be linked from the home page
- Encapsulate the course syllabus, more like lecture notes, calendar and syllabus, for clarity
- Include a complete transcription of the lecture in a pdf document, along with a description of the visuals of the lecture video sequences, for the visually impaired
- Give a link to a list of screen-readers, so that students without them can easily get them
- Include a sub-page for SSD Accommodations available to students with disabilities
- Add a link to ASK the INSTRUCTOR, or message window to contact him with questions
- Add provisions for student collaboration, or perhaps a FORUM
- Repair and/or upgrade the HTML to W3 standards, so errors, below, will not be flagged
- Repair and/or upgrade the CSS to W3 standards, so errors, below, will not be flagged
- Also, run this URL through Vischeck, WebAIM, and Bobby, to be even more thorough.

Overall, I would give this site a grade of “D-“ if it were a live, online site, rather than a recorded site. But, because it is a recorded site, I would give it one grade higher, since expectations are lower, thus raising it to a “C-.” Although it is not the best, it is a very good remediation site for those who want to brush up on their chemical and physics theories of semiconductor manufacturing fundamentals.

End of #8, Bulleted Suggestions Report.

Of course, all of these HTML5 syntax errors should be updated to comply with more modern standards of W3C. With this list, it just takes time to implement those changes. And, of course I do not have access to the coding within MITOpenCourseWare. So, all I can do is to describe these needed changes and submit a detailed trouble report to them for consideration, and to hope that they have the time and budget, and priority to perform them.
